Prince Hermann Von Hohenlohe Langenbourg is appointed the Statthalter of Alsace-Lorraine.

LONDON, October 31st. Lord Sallsbury presided at a meeting of Conservatives at Edinburgh yesterday. His lordship, in his speech, vindicated the policy pursued by the House of Lords, and sald only physical force could overthrow that House of Lords, but he was sure the country would never resort to it. Dwelling on the necessity of a second Chamber, his lordship referred to the resolutions lately passed by the House of Commons with regard | "Plum's soap is good, and Howler's pills are to India, which resolutions, though they merely led to the appointment of commissions of inquiry, have almost shaken the fabric of the Indian Government, If the House of Lords was removed from forming part of the present Parliament of the British Empire. any section of faddists might carry proposals in the House of Commons sevolutionizing the Indian can never govern India well.

ST. PETERSBURG, 1st November. Intelligence received from the Asiatic Proviners of Russia states that bodies of Chinese deserters attacked several Russian frontler stations and succeeded in seizing the arms and munitions which were stored at one of the stations; the attacks were eventually repulsed by the Russians killing sixty of the Chinese. Alexander III is no more; he died at twofifteen post meridian in his villa at Livadia to-day; the consternation is of a profound character, and felt throughout Russia. When the Imperial ensign was seen lowered half-mast vast crowds of people filled the atreets of the capital and most of them made a sign of the cross in memory of the departed. The crowds have not vet dispersed, as they are anxiously waiting to hear further news from Livadia.

ZANZIBAR, November, 1st. The reversal of the appeal by Justice Jardine of the Bombay High Court, on the sentence of death rassed by Mr. H. W. Desausmeres, Acting Joint Sessions Judge, of her Britanuic Majesty Consular Court, Zanzibar, on two Arabs accused of having murdered Mr. Walter Hamilton June last, has caused great consternation among the Europeans here, who fear that the decision will produce a bad impression on the natives.

The drafts of the Medical Staff Corps numbered over 50, but of these some will fund at Gibraltar and Port Sald, the remainder going further East. The detachment of the Rifle Brigade was played from the Fort Camp by bands of the and Brigade, and as the troops passed through the Marlborough and Stanhope lines, the permanent barracks, and Wellingtonavenue, they were loudly cheered by comrades of all regiments. Another very strong detachment of nearly 200 non-commissioned officers and men of the 2nd Batt. THE FIGHTING IN MANCHURIA.

REPORTED ANNIHILATION OF THE "JAPE." Mr. Yip, a native of the province of Kwang-

It is nevertheless worthy of reproduction at the present time, if only for the purpose of showing that the reported precipitate retreat of the Chinese from the Yaloo towards Newchwang and Monkden was not the result of the superior generalship displayed by Japanese commanders. Our native contemporary, after stating the source from which its information was obtained, describes the recent fighting as follows :---

After the Japanese captured the Korean city of Ping-yang they marched towards the Yaloo

river, which they crossed and entered Manchuria in a happy-go-lucky way which showed that they despised an enemy whom they concluded would be driven by them like chaff before the wind. As soon as General Sung came in touch with the Japanese forces he caused his men to retreat and the result, which he very rightly anticipated, was that the enemy advanced rap dly into Manchuria and, reaching a spot where mines had been laid, several thousands of them were blown up, while those who had not come within the sphere of the influence of the deadly trap set for them by the crafty Chinese commanders, fled in considerable disorder back towards the and Yaloo. After this affair the Japanese fleet was ordered to rendezvous at the mouth of the Tatong River, on the right bank of which the city of Ping-yang stands, and after a good deal of telegraphing had been carried on between Hiroshima and the General in command of the first Japanese Army Corps, it was decided to abandon the plan of a direct advance from the Yalco to Moukden and turn their course west from the Yaloo and make a determined descent upon Port Aithur. Accordingly about 30,000 Japanese were landed at Talienwan, and as soon as they put in an appearance the Chinese force there, consisting of about 2,000 man of all srms, retreated and a telegram was forwarded to Li Hung-chang apprising him of the position and strength of the enemy. Li at onced wire orders to General Sung to go to the rescue with 100,000 Mongolian troops. Sung left at once for Tallenwan and wired to Admiral Ting to co-operate with his Ficet on the 11th instant. Shortly before daybreak on the 11th 100,000 hardy Mongolian troops advanced on Tallenwan in two columns and were fired upon the Japanese, whose shells wrought a good deal of havoc among the Chinese, who were advancing in pretty close order. Nothing daunted, however, the Mongolians pushed on and after practicing with their artillery upon the Japanese at pretty close quarters, a general advance was ordered, with the result that thousands of the Japanese were slaughtered. Seeing that he was greatly outnumbered and that the Mongolian troops fought with desperate courage the Japanese General showed the "white feather." Disregarding the signals of distress, the Chinese pressed on, intent upon closing with the foe. Led on to victory by their General who, though badly wounded lu the leg, instilled courage in his men by his own bravery and manifest disregard for the showers of bullets that ever and anon issued from the earthworks which the invaders had thrown up 'the night before, the Chinese drove the Japanese back. After about two hours' hard "lighting the General, knowing that several of his Staff had been killed and otherwise rendered hors de combat and feeling exhausted owing to loss of blood, was about to call a halt and retreat to a safe distance, when sud-General, and gathering fresh courage from letter, the Commander-in-Chief led his men in who were completely routed, many of them being driven into the sea and drowned. When the heads were counted at noon it was found that upwards of 20,000 Japanese had been killed, and a bundred cannon and over 20,000 rifles, besides a large quantity of ammunition and provisions, had fallen into the victors' hands, The foregoing has no doubt been "coloured" somewhat by an imaginative Chinese correspondent, but the report is not half so preposterous as most of the special yarns wired to Hongkong recently by the Times' very own war correspondent and published without reserve in the China Mail. At all events, sure it is that the Japanese did not capture Port Arthur on the 12th, as stated in our very guilible evening contemporary, otherwise Reuter would not have wired out here under date London, 14th November :- " It is believed that the Japanese Government will remain deaf to all peace proposals until Port Arthur has been captured, and it is consteps pending the result of the attack. The United States Government has offered to mediate

In point of fact, Port Arthur, which the China Gasette a fortnight ago asserted would be occupied by the Japanese without the least trouble, has not yet fallen, and the prospects of

REMINISCENCES ON AN OLD JOCKEY.

(Specially written for the " Hongkong Telegraph"

That "nothing succeeds like success" I will endeavour to prove by the following experience of my own : Many years ago'I was light weight lockey to the late George Payne, as he was familiarly known on the Turf. Mr. Payne was a tall, military looking man about sixty, with usually a very stern expression on his face, unless he happened to be on good terms with himself and then his countenance were a happy cheerfu kind of smile so far as its sharp set expression would allow. He was very excitable, irritable a quick speaker, and if he were annoyed he jerked out his sentences like musketry firing very much like his life-long chum the eccentric Earl of Glasgow. He was a splendid judge of horses and their capabilities for racing; in fact he was Admiral Rous' right hand in assisting the then Autocrat of the Jockey Club in the difficult duties of official handicapper. Mr. Payne had at one time almost complete control over Alec Taylor's stable at Manton and Fyfield-by the byc. I regret to see that 'Alec' lately passed over to the great mejority—managing in addition to his own horses those of the Marquis of Aylesbury and Mr. Greville, whose "Memoirs" created so much stir a few years back, and in later years those of Mr. W. S. Stirling Crawford and Mr. J. N. Astley.

was engaged to ride "Farmer's Daughter colt," afterwards named Conscript, for the Arcot Stakes in 1859, carrying 5st, 7lb., my own weight at the time being only 4st. 8lb.; the colt was first favorite, and Mr. Payne put me on £100 if I won. We made a capital race of it, but I was unfortunately beaten on the post by a head, by Lord Strathmore's Mouraviesse, Tom Alderof us. It would have been far better for me if had been besten ten lengths, for if a jockey happens to get beaten by a head, those who have backed him swear it was his fault and that he can't ride, whereas if he finished several lengths behind it is then declared to be the fault of the horse. As we were returning to the weighing room, after pulling up, Mr. Payne came to meet me, looking daggers, and greeted me with-" Why the devil didn't you win ; what were you doing to let him beat you on the post i by God, Sir, I never saw a boy ride worse in all my life." "Now all this, spoken in a loud tone before the crowd, was not pleasant, but his next sentence was even worse. "Take off that cap and lacket : you shall never ride for me again as long as you live." I said I was sorry, that he may carry it home with him to Metalbut it was not my fault that the horse fired at the finish. "Sorry be hanged, Sir, you ought to have won," was his reply, so I said no more, and after weighing in returned the cap and jacket to Alec Taylor, the trainer.

Three or four months passed, and at Oxford Races I had ridden a couple of races the first day, but had no engagement for the second. started early for the course that day and instead of going there by 1 oad; being, boy-like, fond of the water, went up by bost. The river runs alongside the straig ht half-mile of the course, and when we arrived at the commencement of the track I got out and walked up to the enclosure. Previous to the meeting there had been a considerable arrecust of rain, and the course was in a swampy condition, and where the horses had been running the previous day they were over their feilock is in mud. That was mear the rails, or the inside of the course, but where I was walking, on the other side, near the river, was a comparatively hard path, of which I made a mental note, in case I had a moun that day.

After the first race I was sluding in the jockeys room, when Mr. Payne came in, and asked me il I was engaged for the Selli vg Race. I told to Nanakin." him I was not, when, to my susprise, he said he wanted me to ri de Ladybird for him. Mr. Taylor brought the colours, and after weighing out and saddling, h fr. Payne called me on one side, and said in this short incluive manner-"This mare is a der im'd brute, no good, no chance of winning, but rid'e her right through; don't space her, I want to get rid of her; I must back her for a 'fiver,' for the look of the thing, although she has no chance."

I assured him I reguld do my utmost to g her as near the front as I possibly could; th course was the half-mile straight.

In the preliminary cainter I found her somewhat sluggish, so woke her up a little, and going down to the start by worry ing her with the spur I set her off kicking, which was just what wanted, to assist me in tarrying out a little plan

I had formed for our advantage. The horses were all stustered together near the rails, and the starte was standing in the centre of the course. No w, I wanted to start as for his handsome figure and his tattooed skin. rock. hear the other sirje as I could, to get on the hard path as quickly as possible, so keeping the upur at work on the off side. just sufficient to my ke her last out occasionally. I said to the star ter. Mr. & farshall-" Do you object to my starting on this side, as you see am riding a very vicious brutes, and I am afraid she may injure some of the other horses?" "Well," he replie id, " It is rather irregular, but as you say, perhaps it would be better, but you must promise to keep behind the flag till it falls." Of course I promised and kept my word, but as soon as it did fall, my tuare being all excitement from the livening up she had had, bounded away like a deer on the path, while the others were scrambling heavily through the mud. Harry Grimshaw, who was viding the favorite, Starks the American horse t hat won the Goodwood Cup for Mr. Ten Brotck, in seeing the advantage had, came right acre as the course, followed in my track, and I co id h car the clatter of his horse feet getting nearer every stride, while my man was beginning to a how signs of distress, and we had still some dis tance to go. I nursed her a little, slackened | see page, let her recever her wind, and allowed Starket to come up watth his

ing distance, so I let her go, sat down to my dies ?" work in extrest, and after a splendid struggle landed her first past the post by a neck; but if I had not eased her when I did, she would have been beaten to a certainty. As we were walking back to weigh in Mi Payne came to me, his noble old face wearing a very different expression to what it did a Ascot, and be said, with a smile, "Brave, boy, you rode brillantly; never saw a boy ride better didn't think it was in the brute, and I fancy was a fluke now somehow." This latter remark was said more to himself than to me, but after Sergeant T. Moffat said that, in consequence a pause he said, "By the byel I want to speak to you after you have weighed in."

I must now retrace a little; when I was at the starting post Mr. Payne was up in the Grand Stand watching me through his field glasses, and talking loudly to himself to this effect-"Dem thet boy I Why the devil doesn't be get among his horses? What is he doing out there? Why is that beast kicking I never knew her to kick Ng Yl. master of the Kwong Hong Cheung | before ? What can that idiot be thinking about? I said before he should never ride for

Mr. Treen, my trainer, who happened to be standing behind him and overheard him. ventured to remark—" Perhaps, Sir, he has some of the firm's money from the Hongkong and | reason for being out there ?" "Reason be hanged. Shanghai Bank and lost it gambling. The letter ! Sir, he ought to be among his horses," was the reply. Poor old Treen was sorry he spoke, and felt so small that be said no more.

After weighing in I met Mr. Payne outside who said,—Here is a little present for you to start with," placing a five pound note in my hand; "that is, of course, independent of your riding fee. Now, I am anxious to know in the first place, bow you managed to win that race and secondly, what were you doing away from the other horses at the starting post?"

I then excelned the whole matter to him and when I had finished, he said, talking to himself, "Clever boy, demm'd clever boy, capital rider, and cool head;" then addressing me-"Look here, my lad, I gave you a 'fiver' just now for your fine piece of horsemanship, here is another for your tact and judgment, an when you see Mr. Treen this evening please apologise to him for me, as I am afraid I was rather rude to him just now when he was quite right, and , was wrong. Good day, my boy! I shall want you sgain next week. Then he left me to see the mare sold; she realised £65, but I wouldn't have given a "tenner " for her.

I not only rode for Mr. Payne the following week, but had the pleasure of winning ten more races for him before the year was out : but if I had not won the Selling Race I should never have had the chance, which I think proves my opening statement to be correct, that "Nothing succeeds like success."

"LULIBAN OF THE POOL."

A boy and a girl sat by the rocky margin of a deep mountain pool in Ponage. The girl was weaving a basket from the leaves of a cocoanut : as she wove she sang the "Song of Luliban," and the boy listened intently.

"Tis a fine song that thou singest, Niya," said the boy, who came from Metalanien and was a stranger; "and who was Luliban, and Red-Hair the White Man ?"

never heard in Metalanien of Luliban, she who dived with one bushand and came up with another—in this very pool."

"What new lie is this thou tellest to the boy cravfish.

"Lie?" said the child : "nay, 'tis! no lie. Is thy blue carcass." not this the Pool of Luliban, and do not we sing of Nanakin, my father, the chief of Jakoits? "True, Niya, true," said the White Man, "I hill. Be wise and forget his blows.' "Then Luliban sent a messenger to Ngatik to Herry. He came and brought with him many square bottles of grog, and went in to Red-Hair's house and they drank and quarrelled as they ever did, but because of what lay in his mind Harry got not drunk, for his eyes were always fixed on the face of Luliban.

Now among those who watched him was Luliben, and presently her husband sought her and drove her away, saying : 'Get thee to my house, little heast. What dost thou here watching this fool dance !'

"Harry but laughed and danced the more, and then Red-Hair gave him foul words. When the dance was ended. Harry went up to Red-Hair and said, 'Get thee home also, thou cutter of sleeping men's throats. I am a better man than thee. There is nothing that thou hast done that cannot do.

"Then Nanakin, whose mouth was ready with words put therein by Luliban, said, 'Nay, Harry, thou dost but boost. Thou canst not walk under the water in the Deep Pool with a heavy stone on thy shoulder-as Red-Hair has done." "' Bah!' said Harry. 'What he can do that can do. "Now, for a man to go in at one end of this pool here"-and Niva nodded her head to the waters at her feet-"and walk slong the bottom and come out at the farther end is no great task, and as for carrying a heavy stone that doth but make the task easier; but in those days there were devils who lived in a cave that is beneath where we now sit, and none of our people ever bathed here, for fear they would be seized and dragged down. But yet had Red-Hair one day put a stone upon his shoulder and carried i under the water from one end of the pool to another—this to show the people that he feared no devils. But of the cave that can be gained by diving under the wall of rock he knew nothing—only to a few was it known."

"' Show this boaster his folly,' said Nanakin to Red-Hair, who was chewing his beard with wrath. And so it was agreed upon the morrow that the two white men should walk each with a stone upon his shoulder, in at one end of the deep pool and come out of the other, and Harry should prove his boast, that in all things he was equal to Red-Hair.

"When Red-Hair went back to his house Luliban was gone, and some said she had fled to the mountains, and he repreached Nanakiu, saying: 'Thy daughter bath fled to Ngatik to to the house of Harry. I will have her life and his for this.' But Nanakin smoothed his face and said: 'Nay, not so ; but first put this boaster to shame before the people, and he shall die, and Luliban be found. "Now, Luliban was hid in another village, and when the time drew near for the trial at the pool she went there before the people. In her hand she carried a sharp tokt (tomahawk) and a long piece of strong cinnet with a looped end. She dived in and clambered out again underneath and waited. The cave is not dark, for there are many fissures in the top through which light comes when the sun is high.

"The people gathered round, and laughed and talked as the two white men stripped naked, save for narrow girdles of leaves round their loins. The skin of Red-Hair was as white as sand that "O Guk/" said Niya wonderingly, "hast lies always in the sun; that of Harry was brown, and covered from his neck to his feet with strange tattooing, more beautiful than that of the men of
